

Ehsan Shamsi Gooshki MD PhD

Assistant professor of Medical Ethics, Tehran University of Medical Sciences

Dr. Shamsi Gooshki graduated as a physician in 2005, after seven years of medical education and many cultural and NGO activities in national level. Later, following a 3-year period of administrative experience as the director of the international campus of Shiraz University of Medical Sciences, he was enrolled in the first Ph.D. program of medical ethics in Iran in 2009. Until his graduation in 2013 he had been working as executive director of “Iranian Research Center for Ethics and Law in Medicine” and also involving in several research projects, teaching of various topics in medical ethics to undergraduate and graduate students, lecturing in a number of national & international workshops/conferences, participating in UNESCO Ethics Teachers Training Course”, doing internship in the department of ethics at World Health Organization in Geneva, being visiting research fellow at the “Institute of Biomedical Ethics, University of Zurich” and “Kennedy Institute of Ethics, Georgetown University”, Washington D.C. simultaneously. In June 2013 he defended his dissertation, which explored the ethical, jurisprudential and legal aspects of Do-Not-Resuscitate (DNR) Orders in Iran health system as the first graduate of medical ethics Ph.D. program inside the country. Now as the “Assistant Professor of Medical Ethics at Tehran University of Medical Sciences” as the core of his activities, he is trying to apply ethical standards to practice as the “Director of the National Committee for Ethics in Biomedical researches at the Ministry of Health and Medical Education”, “Director of Medical Ethics Department of Islamic Republic of Iran Medical Council” and the “Secretary of Medical Ethics Group at the Iran Academy of Medical Sciences”. Since 2006 he has been nominated by the Minister of Higher Education as the member of “National Bioethics Committee” hosted by the “National UNESCO Commission”.

